In many of Bram Stoker's stories he has the same theme. I got the theme listen to what people tell you out of the stories. It made sense because in most of the stories like 'Dracula's Guest' and 'The Judge's House' there are characters that do not listen and should have listened to what people had told them.

Dracula's Guest (2008) - IMDb

"Dracula's Guest" is generally thought to be an episode Stoker wrote for inclusion in DRACULA--an episode that was cut during the editing process. Well, maybe, maybe not; a good many critics have noted that it is quite unlike DRACULA in tone and that it is difficult to see where the piece would have fit in the novel.

I have always loved the book Dracula (although there are parts of it that drag) In my opinion Bram Stoker was made to write short stories like the ones in Dracula's Guest. The first one is a piece that was taken from the original manuscript of Dracula for the time constraints of the novel. The others are just pieces from Bram Stoker's mind.
