Franco told the New York Times that his title poem, Directing Herbert White, was "about my relationship to that poem, Frank's relationship to the poem as I have learned about it from knowing Frank and the adaptation process," and "how Frank puts so much of himself into the figure of this psycho necrophiliac".

James Franco Publishing A Book Of Poetry - Business Insider

Directing Herbert White, James Franco's first full length collection of poetry, reads as a study of the self, an autology. In its strongest moments, this book explores vanity with a keen sense of discernment and revels in its narcissism. It trusts, reasonably, the reader is arriving with a full working knowledge of James Franco.
