Death Sworn 1 Leah Cypess

"She might be about to die, but she didn't have to do it cowering." 3 1/2 stars. I must admit - I didn't really expect to like Death Sworn. I've had my eye on it for a while but many of my GR friends didn't like it, especially with the limited world-building.

Chapter 1. The first step should have been the hardest. The cave entrance angled so sharply that one step was all it took: plunging her from light to darkness, from the fresh scent of snow to the smell of musty earth, from the touch of the breeze to the weight of dank stone. Ileni stopped for a moment, and not only to allow her eyes to adjust.

Death Sworn (Death Sworn #1) by Leah Cypess - The Book Hookup

I wrote my first story in first grade. The narrator was an ice-cream cone in the process of being eaten. In fourth grade, I wrote my first book, about a girl who gets shipwrecked on a desert island with her faithful and heroic dog (a rip-off of both The Black Stallion and all the Lassie movies, very impressive).

review 1: I read an unfortunate amount of YA novels because of the sheer volume of production. Most of it is bland, stereotypical and unintelligent. This book was a pleasant surprise. An interesting premise along with likeable (if stereotypical) leads meant I read it in one sitting. Death Sworn won't likely top the "best of" lists but it's definitely in the top 25% of recent releases.

Author: Leah Cypess Sorin leaned forward, poised and deadly. Ileni could feel his eagerness. The gleam was back in his eyes. Irun crossed his arms over his chest and sneered. "What, were you commanded to guard her against insults, too?" Ileni laughed. It started out too loud and forced, but her hysteria gave it an edge, made it real.
