I'm a researcher both by vocation and by instinct. I may seem like a marginally normal human on the outside, but rest assured, I have enough nerd in me to make Steve Urkel look like the Fonz. In January 2014, I published a book called "Death by Food Pyramid" and have a few more simmering on the back burner. My 'public time' is divided between speaking at conferences, yapping on ...

The prevailing (and failing) dogma in Western medicine today is that cancer is caused and driven by genetic mutations, or just bad luck. This theory asserts that when a cell endures extensive damage to its genetic material (DNA) it eventually reaches a point where it goes rogue from its intended function and becomes cancerous.
