Before I sketch the way toward a more satisfactory construction of reality for believers, allow me to state forthrightly the premises I bring to that task. I hold, first, that the Living God does act within creation in the present, just as the Living God acted within creation in the past—that is, that the presence and power of God within creation are real, and as capable of being experienced ...

I don't know when I first heard the term "authentic Catholics." But I first began to think seriously about it last year, when a budget crisis at my workplace and alma mater, the Catholic University of America, propelled us into the news.. On the surface, the turmoil was primarily about financial decisions.
