Lab Assignment 3: Newton's Laws Instructor's Overview Newton's laws of motion are a central component of our understanding of physics. As we discussed in Module 5, Newton's laws can be summarized as follows: Inertia – An object tends to resist changes in its motion. Relationship between the mass of an object, the net applied force, and the resulting acceleration – $F = m \cdot a$.

Friction Lab Help (Physics) ? ... Best Answer: You will need some weights and a force Gauge (a device for measuring forces) . First measure the mass of your wooden block (either using the force gauge or some scales) and then place it on the desk. Attach the force gauge to the side of the block and drag the block at a constant speed.

55 As you learned in the Linear Motion Lab, a quantity that conveys information about magnitude only is called a scalar. However, when a quantity, such as velocity, conveys information about magnitude and direction, we call it a vector. Along with carrying that extra bit of information about the path of motion, vectors are also useful in physics because they
