Debt By: Nina G. Jones. My eyes are again drawn to his tattoo as the pit of snakes wriggle on his neck. I want to bite him, I want to kiss him, but he won't let me touch him. "Don't move your fucking hands," he says. I haven't moved them since he pinned them overhead. His message was loud and clear long before he had to utter the words.

He looks up at me from the corner of his eye. "Someone owed me," he says knowingly. "There are many ways to pay a debt. That's all I can say, babe." Babe. I love how his throaty, husky voice wraps itself around that perky word and manhandles the shit out of it. "So, your last name? Draconi?" "It's my mother's."
