Does anybody else feel like they look better without makeup? My face just seems stuffy and gross. Wearing foundation makes my face look weird and cakey while eye shadow makes my face look dirty. it sounds weird but that is what it does. Even wearing mascara is bad because my eyelashes are long and it looks like I am wearing fake ones.

That said, I do feel that my time reading Does Anybody Else Look Like Me? was fruitful. The interviews with multiracial individuals in their late teens through early 30s were quite illuminating. They were the best part of the book. I think of these people as my kids grown up— what they could be if we do things the way their parents did.

I think I recall a couple of Micheal and Trevor that, while I can tell who it's supposed to be, doesn't look like them in the face. Characters evolve a lot over time, and one concept rendering leads to adding more character, which is what we get here. The concept art looks more generic, while the actual characters look like distinct people.

If this book had been entitled, "Does Anybody Else Look Like Me? A White Parent's Guide to Raising Multiracial Children", I would have been a lot happier with it. I still would have bought it (I have a White mother) AND I would have recommended it. I certainly think Nakazawa has offered us something here. But I am critical of her perspective.
